Josef Tal

Structure

for harp (1961)
Structure for Harp solo is based on a dodecaphonic row, which serves as the basic material for harmonic and melodic combinations by singing out one section of the twelve-tone series (which section is close to the ancient pentatonic system) and combining it with the whole to create a new polyphony for a set of variations.